

Rosie Robinson

I am a Therapeutic Radiographer at The James Cook University Hospital in Middlesbrough, recently put in post as a Clinical Specialist Lead Radiographer.

On a daily basis we work to deliver safe and effective radiotherapy treatment to cancer patients and provide holistic support to them and their family members. I have worked in our department for 6 years and really enjoy getting to know the patients we treat and making a difference.

One key area in my role is working as department Practice Educator to support student and apprentice radiographers and developing recruitment and retention strategies for trainees. I am also relied upon to provide specialist advice to the treatment radiographers to ensure appropriate delivery of radiotherapy.
